Bellaire, Nt. Clairsville and Wheeling.
The article in suother column from the Wheeling INTELLIGNEER, of Monday, gives the true and exact attitude of that tity toward Bellaire and Belmont county. What they want is all the trade of Belmont county, and the county seat to remain where it is. That may be satisfactory to those people in Bellaire who are more anxhous to uphold and help build up the institutions of that city than they are those of Bellaire, but we do not believe it will be to those citizens of Bellaire and Belmont county who take a pride in their own city, and who do all they can to uphold, maintain and build up the institutions and industries of Bellaire and Belmont county. Take away the trade of Belmont county, which now goes to Wheeling, and that city would feel it very seriously. If that trade remained in Belmont county, the county would be that much better off, and that much more prosperons than it is. The benefit of Belmont county to Wheeling and Wheeling to Belmont county, is like the handle of a jug—Bellaire Democrat.

Wa fast that the Democrat does not do Belmont county, which now goes be with the work of the seriously. If that trade remained in Belmont county, the county would be that much better off, and that much more prosperous than it is. The benefit of Belmont county to Wheeling and Wheeling to Belmont county, is like the handle of a jugall on one side—on the side of Wheeling.

—Bellaire Democrat.

We fear that the Democrat does not do the above subject full justice. We regard what St. Clairsville has done in the way of railroads as something done in self defence. She has done nothing but what any other place similarly situated would naturally do. In fact, it was a geographical necessity that she chould congraphical necessity that she can be sufficient to the short of the same of the force. naturally do. In fact, it was a geo graphical necessity that she should con nect herself by railroad facilities with all county. In providing railroad connections St. Clairsville has weakened the position of all her rivals. In doing so she has, as we have said, at the same time opened an avenue to her own people to to interfere with business or pleasure. come and go cheaply and expeditiously, and hence her trades-people are necessarily brought into- more active and closer competition with such places as Bellaire, Bridgeport and Wheeling. Bellaire has no reason to complain, inasmuch as she is really more benefited than Bridgeport or Wheeling by one of the roads built by St. Clairsville. Travel from St. Clairsville has thus been diverted to Beliaire that would otherwise have come over the National road to Bridge port and Wheeling. To this extent Bel aire has been peculiarly benefited, and certainly there should be no ground of feeling on her part against any of the other places because a railroad is about to

As to the benefits to all the places named, Bellaire, St. Clairsville and Wheeling, they are certainly reciprocal. What are these places at last but parts of one community. Wheeling is a large consumer of Belmont county products, and she in return sells a certain amount of merchan dise to the people of Belmont. The money made is invested on both sides of the river and Bellaire has received her share in this There is no need of any Jealousy, for we are all one in many respects, and yearly becoming more so. Bellaire, Bridgeort, and Martin's Ferry will in time be one solid town, and Wheeling and Ben-wood will be one, and both sides of the one solid town, and Wheeling and Benwood will be one, and both sides of the river will at least closely resemble Pittsburgh and Allegheny City. Each side will give and take, and the money made in the operation will be reciprocally invested for the prosperity of the large community length of the prosperity of the large community length of the prosperity of the large community length of the larg

As for St. Clairsville, she is the "poo relation" of us all, and we ought all to feel kindly towards ther. We do not mean that she is a little further away and has not the same elements of growth to rely of, and hence her pluck and spirit in holdof, and hence her pluck and spirit in hold-ing on to whatever advantages she has ought not to excite anybody's jealousy, W. As for Whee ing, she has naught but good will for all, her neighbors. As they are fortunate she cun afford to rejoice with them, knowing that, after all, it is bone of her bone and flesh of her flesh. As they all grow we all come together. We are all bound to prosper together. Bellaire, like Wheeling, grows by virtue of her foreign trade, not her local trade. The two places bring money into this region from all parts of the country, and dispense it here for mutual up building. This is as it should be. We form a connected community of 50,000 people, who are consumers of agricultural products raised on both sides of the river, and hence town and country on both sides are thus connected together in the bonds of a common prosperity and common destiny.

A Memento of the Chicago Convention

Harpor's Weckly. The principal citizens of Wheeling, in West Virginia, have presented Mr. A. W. Campbell, of the Wheeling Intelligences, a picture representing the incident in the Chicago Convention with which his name is honorably identified. Mr. Campbell, it will be remembered, voted "No" upon Mr. Conkling's resolution binding every member to agree to support any nomination that might be made. Mr. Campbell said that he expected to support the nomination of the Convention, but that he should certainly not pledge himself in advance. Mr. Conkling then moved, in effect, that Mr. Campbell be expelled. But General Garfield interposed, and recalled the Convention to its muniness and solf-respect. Mr. Conkling tried to escape from the position he had taken, by means of Senator Hoar, the President of the Convention But Mr. Hoar quietly declined to be used for the purpose, and Mr. Conkling was compelled to withdraw the resolution.

In accepting the picture, Mr. Campbell said that he had found the true secret of editorial independence to lie in disconnecting his paper from any personal ambitions and schemes whatever, whether his own or those of others. His views are those of the most successful editors, and they express the secret of the power of that he expected to support the nominathese of the most successful editors, and they express the seuret of the power of great journals. Personal organs are not great journals.

At Obleago Mr. Campbell did a signal service for political manhood in this country. The party despoisism which seeks to desiroy honorable independence was never more conspicuously illustrated than at Chicago, and it was never more ignominiously overthrown.

As long as she did not do what she has done Bellaire had a ground of complaint against her in favor of the removal of the county seat, as had other parts of the county.
